ENGLISH NAILERS. The Birmingham Workers-How They Live and What They Earn.

Plorence Kelley in National Tribune.

Since last I wrote I have traversed Eng and from sunny Kent to the smoky Black country, and now I write from this stirring city among mines and forges. Here the sky is darkened by overhanging clouds of smoke; fields that should be of riches green, or golden with heavy grain, are paried beneath mountains of slag from the which we stood watching her. She said it that she worked every day and all day, is and earned three and ninepence, of which is expence was absorbed for rent and six for fourteen" can earn sixty-eight cents per week and learn, meanwhile, a trade which is growing every year more and more completely obsolete. If she has kept the law, as she claims to have done, she is an illustration of its limitation; for it could project tect her only until she is "turned fourteen;" her youth henceforth is her own, to be a spent in bondage to the nail furnace. Although this was the only child to be found, and although the young women were mostly "off to the 'op pickin," there were hundreds of older women in the village toiling at this nuwomanly trade, who all told the mines below, and the country throughout circuit of ten miles from Birmingham is so crowded with villages of miners, nail and chain makers, and great brick works, that it is not easy to discover the point at which the city ends.

I had read accounts of the hardships en-which the city ends.

I had read accounts of the hardships endured by women and children in the Black Country, and of the factory acts for the prevention of atrocious cruelty practiced upon child-workers. I had learned in London something of the workings of the school boards and local government board in relation to the work of children, and it was, therefore, with keen interest that I went yesterday morning to Halescen, a nail makers' village, six or seven miles from Birmingham.

On entering Halespen we asked where we could see nati-makers at work. "Everywhere," was the prompt reply. "Look there; there's one." We looked and saw a small brick pen, tile roofed, and lighted by three small ungliszed windows. It was occupied by three men, of whom one acted as spokesman, going swiftly with his work while he answered our questions. "How much can I make? Three shillings a day, if I make fifty six pounds of wrought nails in a day, and I generally do. But it's hard work comin'on since the machinery's been eatin' up our work." As he talked he pushed a long slender iron rod into a covered hearth that filled the center of the dark little workshop, and quickly withdrawing smother rod hammered this slightly to fit it hearth that filled the center of the dark little workshop, and quickly withdrawing another rod hammered this slightly to fit it for a metal mold. Deltly breaking of the glowing end as he piaced it in the mold, he replaced the rod on the hearth and pounded the future nail in its mold, alternately with a treadle-hammer, until the nail grew cool and became possessed of a head. Three shillings (75 cente) a day for fifty-six pounds of such nails seemed poor pay enough, but this was not the precise form of hardship of which we were in search, and we strolled on.

Near the foot of a steep hill a narrow street, without sidewalks, turned sharply same story of low wages, heavy deductions, and the rigid inspections of the school boards.

In summing up my visit to Halesoen, the most salient feature that atands out in the picture is the fine fibre of the people, who seemed uniformly hard-working, fond of their homes and eager to make the best of a lot whose bitterness they themselves cannot measure. No house occupied by a nailer's family has more than three rooms—one living room and two sleeping rooms. A cellar is a thing unknown, and a house with "water pipes laid on" a luxury of which no nailer dreams. Yet these women were eager to show us their homes, proud of the cleanliness that shone from whitewashed walls and ill rilded floors in sharp contrast with the coal-grime of the women's faces, hands, and clothing. How they keep such brave hearts they only know!

Next to the admiration which the workers themselves inspire comes respect to the school board, which gathers up the children and secures them thirteen years of child-life before their weary slayery begins. Not a school child could we see in a Halesoen workshop; and, though the hop-picking and the possibility of our being informers may have had something to do with this, the parents' dread of the inspectors proves that the school board is a mighty protector of childhood.

These two discoveries destroyed several Almost dead or nearly dying."

These two discoveries destroyed several of my preconceived ideas. I had gone in search of degradation and cruelty. I found only men and women who, in their terrible poverty and their aisvish toil, inspired only admiration. I found, also, a degree of governmental protection of childhood that made me blush for my own State's neglect of the education of her childworkers.

leasure, telling us that she had lived for five and forty years in it, that her husband was stocktaker in a factory, and earned regular wages. "No, no e's not a nailer; I'm a nailor, and I teach the children." There had been thirteen children, of whom three had died. One works for a master nailer, one works in a coal mine near by (they're msrried"), two are out at service, and three are too yourg to work. The mother, though "a little past nailin" is the baker of bread for the neighborhood and had a window full that looked very tempting.

If the reader will bear this mind the de-

Mary who long suffered from urinary and digestive disease, causing nervousness, weak ness and debility, after trying bitters, kidney medicines, Iron medicines, etc., without benefit, have found permanent relief in from one to three bottles of Dr. Guysott's Yallow Dock watch me if you wish," she said. "Mother says I'm a good nailer, and I must be, lor I can earn six and three pence in a week, though I don't work reg'lar hours, and I'd earn more if I did. The machinery makes it hard to make much now. I remember when I could get nine and six where now I can only get six and three, and mother would get yet more. I help her to three bottles of Dr. Geyout's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, the only perfect blood purious and strengthener. Hundreds of letters to the proprietors have testified to its superiority over many pretended curse so larsely when I could get nine and six where now I remember when I could get nine and six where now I can only get six and three, and mother would get yet more. I help her when I could get nine and six where now I can only get six and three, and mother would get yet more. I help her in the house a great deal. Would you like to see mother? She can tell more than I can." "Mother" was a tall, well-built woman, with a fine face and the same air of quiet self respect. "Yes, they'r good nailers," she said, looking with pride at the son and daughter. "I taught them mysell. I used to do a good deal at the nailin' mysell, but now I'm a little past tis and there is a good deal to do to keep the house goin'. My daughter helps me with that, too, and that other daughter you see there, too. She's too young for the nailin'; they ain't allowed at that fill they're turned fourteen, and she lacks six months? There was a gentleman comed around a month or two sgo, and said they wasn't to work such long hours neither; 'e'ad a paper, and 'e put it upon the wall there, and it 'anged there, but father was a whiteweshin' about a bit to keep it eweet and clean for the children, an' I don't know what'e done with it. The son laughed quietly at that, and said, "Weil, I don't mind the payper much, and sometimes I get in fourteen hours or so, and they don't catch me." The mother's quick questions led her to say, "So you're come to America just to go about and look at things in different countries. W'y, that's w'at we'd call a 'oliday; but we couldn't get it, not for a single day, two on us to gether. of, and when I said so the mother offered to show me "a case sad enough to be worth coming across the sea to look at," and led us to a workshop smaller than those we had seen. Here were two men, a cripple and a consumptive, at work upon "woman's nails," that is, small wrought nails. One of these unhappy toliers earned three shillings per week, of which one shilling went for fire and furnace rent; the other earned four shillings, less the same deductions. The sight was a haunting one, and will not soon fade from the memory, but it was still not the overwork of children, the precise hardship of which I was in quest, and we strolled on.

Pale, Poor, Puny, and Pallid. Considering all the ills that attaclittle children, it is a wonder that any of the poor little youngsters live to grow up.

There are children who are truly objects of pity. They seem almost bloodless. Their cheeks are thin and pinched; their eyes are hollow; and their skin is tightly drawn over their foreheads. There is nothing hearty about them. They do not enjoy their lives. They are suffering from the debility that leads to marasmus.

Poor things!

Do a good deed for the pale, poor puny, pallid child. Hand its mother a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. Here is life even for the most deli-cate, the most debilitated; for the child almost given up for dead. Iron in the blood is what the child needs to bring it up. The little digestive apparatus will recover. The pale cheeks will fill out. The weary groan of the child will be exchanged for the merry prattle of infantile gladness. Your druggist will tell you what wonders Brown's Iron Bitter: has done for very sick children. 11

YUNICIPAL COURT OF WHEELING,
WHALLING, NOVEMBER 20, 1882.

I, Thomes M. Darrah, Clerk c! sid Court, certify than bond and security has been siyns by the above named commissioner as required by law and the above mentioned decree.

THOMAS M. DARRAH,
Clerk of the Municipal Court of Waceling, noil: was bad a window full that looked very tempting.

If the reader will bear this mind the description of the house will have a weighty meaning. Here is a family originally of fifteen persons, of whom seven are removed from the home circle (three by death, two by being at service, and two by marriage). Now seven from fifteen leaves eight, and these eight people live in a house that has three rooms. One is the living room, and two sleeping rooms above it contain one room for father, mether and baby aged three, and the adjoining room for five other children. The quiet, modest girl and her brother, after working at the forge all day (the boy semetimes "getting in fourteen hours") are forced to share their bed room with each other and with their younger brothers ane sisters. This crowding is not by reason of any idleness or drunkenness or want of decency in the family. The father is "steady," and has fall work as a stock-taker. The mother is a skillful baker, and keeps her little shop, the sons and the daughter all contribute to the family funds, and the three little children go regularly to school. The thriftiness of the family was proved in every direction. The living room was clean and cosy, though it was only 10 o'clock in the morning when we went it it. The youngest two of the children, at home now for the summer vacation, were warmly and neatly clad, and their rosy faces and sturdy limbs bore witness to habitual good care. "I think I'm 'appy t' 'ave' em all 't' 'ome," continued "mother." "If they was scattered about away from the village I wouldn't rightly know if they was kept werry clean; and that's the secret to good health to my thinkin'—plenty of white-washin' and scrubbin." It snawer to a question about the youngerns childre's very strict about the children, If they was scattered about away from the village I wouldn't rightly know if they was kept werry clean; and that's the secret to good health to my thinkin'—plenty of white-washin' and scrubbin." It snawer to a question about the youngerns childre's very st Insures against less or damage by fire and light-ning all classes of destrable property, also insures Cargoss on the Western waters.

J. N. Vance, M. Reily, L. C. Stifel, J. H. Hobbs, C. W. Frannielm. I found, instead, self respect and family affection under conditions of grinding toll and crowded living that would excuse gross bratality.

WHULESOME, ECUNOMICAL Toll of this kind and overcrowding were, however, not precisely what I was in search and sentence of the search of the Office, No. 35 Twelfth Street.
